WILLIAM GILMORE SIMMS.—[From the New York World.]—The death of this distinguished Southern novelist took place at the residence of his son-in-law in Charleston, S. C., on Saturday evening. Mr. Simms was born in Charleston, April 17, 1806. He was of Irish extraction. At the early age of 7 years he began to write verses, and during the latter part of the War of 1812 the chief employment of his leisure hours was to compose rhymed narratives of the exploits of the American army and navy.

Owing to the poverty of his family and a sickly childhood, his early education was very imperfect, and at 10 years of age almost his only requirements were a knowledge of reading and writing. For several years afterwards he was employed as a clerk in a drug and chemical store in Charleston, but at the age of 18 he quitted this occupation to begin the study of the law.

A year's practice at this exacting profession sufficed to weary him, and in 1825 he turned his attention to literature. His first published work was a "Monody on the Death of Charles Cotesworth Pinckney." He followed this with two volumes entitled "Lyrical and Other Poems" and "Early Lyrics." In the meantime he had become editor of the Charleston City Gazette. Taking the side of the Union in the nullification troubles of 1832, his subscribers deserted him, and left him nearly penniless.

This partly decided him to remove to the North, and thus for several years he became a member of the literary society of New York.

Mr. Simms published his first novel in 18-33: "Martin Faber, the Story of a Criminal." Thereafter, nearly to the present day, he has been one of the most industrious and prolific of living authors, sending forth in rapid succession volumes of poetry, romance, history, biography, or miscellaneous literature, many of which obtained a wide popularity. Among his best novels were "Count Julian," "The Partisan," "Mel-lichamp," "Guy Rivers," "Border Beagles," "Beauchamp," and "Katherine Walton," and his masterpiece was generally conceded to be "The Yemassee," founded upon Indian character and history.

To the department of history and biography Mr. Simms contributed a "History of South Carolina," and lives of General Marion, Captain John Smith, the Cavalier Bayard, and General Greene. He wrote continually for the magazines and periodicals, and there was scarcely a department in literature that did not receive some contribution from his pen.

Until within a few years, Mr. Simms resided on a fine plantation at Midway, S. C., and occupied himself in rural and literary pursuits.
This place was destroyed by the invading army during the war, and he was again reduced to poverty. He came North for a second time to live, and remained here until within a year, devoted to his old pursuits. Simms's writings were at one time very popular throughout the country, and are still so in the South. He was undoubtedly the most esteemed of American historical novelists after Cooper.

In personal character he was a genial, refined, and pleasant gentleman, frank and courteous in his manners, and blameless in his private life. Wherever he lived, there he had troops of friends, and among them not a few admirers of his works, who were wont to regard him with the same worship that was lavished by the neighbors of Gad's Hill upon the great novelist, whose career and death were almost contemporaneous with those of the subject of this sketch.

SINGULAR SUICIDE IN BERLIN.—I have to record the death by suicide of a young American, hailing from West Roxbury, Mass., who had been pursuing his musical studies here at the Kullack Conservatory for about eight months. In a fit of utter despondency, most unusual in a youth of nineteen years of age, he went into a wood, about four miles from this city, and deliberately blew out his brains, with a pistol he had just purchased, as evidence from the price ticket still attached thereto.
On his person were found, among private effects, such as watch, money, &c., a pocketbook, containing, a most minute account of daily expenditures since his landing at Hamburg, and which sufficiently denoted him a most orderly, economical and prudent young man. A separate entry showed that he had at the time a considerable balance in his banker's hands. Previous to the rash deed he had written letters in pencil on the pages of the book to his relatives, among which the following, sufficiently explaining his motives to his father, thus:

"It is no use, father. I wish to make a calm and perfectly true statement. I have been here nearly eight months, and to day I cannot strike one note upon the piano as it should be struck. Herr Wiprecht, chief of orchestra here, was right. I wish to be deaf. Dear father, do not think too harshly of me. You cannot know how hard I have tried to get the right way, but I am firmly convinced that I should have never played the piano as it ought to be played. I had learned entirely wrong, and it was too late to do everything over again.
Thank you, dear father, a thousand times, for your love and kindness in sending me here, and I wish it might have been otherwise.
God bless you, my father, and may you forgive your son."

The necessary arrangements for his burial were attended to by Consul Kreissman, and he was interred last night in the cemetery at Charlottenburg, a town in the vicinity of the wood where the tragic event took place.—Berlin correspondent of the N. Y. Herald.

A wretch who had stolen his master's wife was thus made conscious of the enormity of the offense by Lord Kenyon in passing sentence:
"Dead to every claim of natural affection, and blind to your own interest, you have burst through all restraints of morality and religion, and have for many years been feathering your nest with your master's bottle!"
